

Regional statistics for Greek lichens

At present 1427 taxa of interest to lichenologists (i.e. including lichenicolous fungi) are recorded for Greece. The numbers known for various regions of Greece are shown below.

Some reports can not be assigned to a nomos, even though they can be assigned to a larger region.

Most of Greece remains under-explored for lichens, and some parts have scarcely been studied at all. On the mainland, the lichens of Thrace are particularly poorly known. Most of the smaller islands have never received any kind of serious study.

The map on the final page of the Lichen Atlas of Greece shows every site from which at least one lichen has been recorded. The blank expanses on the map, which represent unstudied areas, are obvious.

If you are considering fieldwork in Greece, I can provide a list of the species known for the nomos or island that you plan to visit.
